SOILAGE CROP NEEDED

Barnvard Manure Not Indispensable if Clover Is Planted.

(By a Staff Correspondent.) St. Paul, March 9 .- Are we coming to the age of horseless farmsfarms without livestock of any kind, as is declared by Henry Ford? Is is possible to keep up the soil fertility without livestock? Henry Ford says yes; some of the agricultural experts are aghast at such heterodoxy.

Recently Prof. Ladd, of the North Dakota Experiment Station, issued a bulletin pointing out that the manurial value of the by-product feedstuffs shipped out of the State with wheat, oats and other grains produced on North Dakota farms amounted to over $15,000,000 a year, and he argued that the grain, therefore, ought to be ground in North Dakota and the by-products fed to stock.

Livestock a Linbility.

That is the orthodox reasoning of the farm experts, but now comes a maker of farm tractors with his theory that all livestock on a modern farm is a liability, instead of an asset.

The article in the March 9 issue of The Washington Herald reporting the theories of Mr. Ford upon scientific agriculture was shown to the agricultural professors of the Minnesota Experiment Station and College of Agriculture, and the very professor most directly interested soil fertility, Dr. Alway, declared that Mr. Ford is not advocating the impossible.

that the stockless farmer needs to do to maintain the fertility MOVING, PACKING, STORAGE, of the soil, is to handle soilage crops as science directs. For nitro gen, he should grow clover, which gathers nitrogen from the air and puts it into the soil; it works while the farmer sleeps. Then to get potassium, he plows under the clover, and as it decays it releases carbonic acid, which frees potassium. He may have to add commercial phosphate. And if the soil is deficient in lime, so that it will not grow clover freely, add lime or powdered limestone.

> Manure Found Superfluous. soil the farmer is working, as to the use of barnyard manure. Many Judge A. B. A lone and scraggly gray kitten, with a wry neck, now cavorts in the dogless paradise of the White House grounds, untrod by the canine breed save for rare visits of Dr. Grayson's prize Airedale with his master.

With the brazen assurance of the abandoned alley-born, this feline has taken possession of the cellars of the executive offices and all abutting precincts. penetrating as far as the portico and gardens where President Wilson takes his daily sun baths. This is more than Senators or Cabinet officers can do, but the explorer evidently knows the adage of the cat and the king.

It's a poor cat around which superstition cannot weave, and this one is no exception. The first time one of the colored attaches of the Executive Mansion beheld the ill-favored face peering around a corner on the end of the congenitally twisted neck, he whispered with perturbation, "Jackson!"

"That sure is Jackson come back, and they didn't have time to straighten his neck," he elu-cidated, and he proceeded with alacrity to offer choice scraps to the supposed reincarnation of James Henry Jackson, hanged two weeks ago in the District

Not restrained by superstitious terrors, workers around the White House threaten "Jackson" with dire punishment if he "makes a pass" at the birds or squirrels to which the front lawns are dedicated. And as Jacksn in his foraging has been casting carnivorous glances at the furred and feathered denizens, he seems to be heading straight for trouble But what's that to him, with nine lives and a reincarnation to his credit?
